

Broward College Statement Regarding Information Security Issues at the College Center for Library Automation

On June 23, 2010, Broward College was made aware that a report generated and posted by the College Center for Library Automation (CCLA) containing confidential information belonging to students, faculty and staff of several Florida College System institutions, including Broward College, may have been accessible to certain internet search engines. Broward College immediately notified CCLA of this potential information security issue.

CCLA is investigating this matter and will be providing appropriate notice to all affected individuals as soon as possible. Broward College is not aware of any information that was inappropriately accessed; only that confidential information was temporarily unprotected. At this time the extent of the risk appears to be minimal, however, until the investigation is complete, the degree to which individual information may have been at risk is unknown.

Protecting the privacy of employee and student information remains of the utmost importance at Broward College and the College will continue to take all necessary measures to protect that information from disclosure.

If you have any questions or concerns, please contact the CCLA Chief Information Security Officer at CISO@cclaflorida.org. We will keep you informed as additional information becomes available.
