Where is Seville?

Seville is located 300 miles southwest of Madrid in Andalusia, the southernmost province of Spain that shares the Iberian peninsula with Portugal. A high speed train from Madrid reaches Seville in just two-and-one-half hours. By plane you can be here in just 45 minutes!
WHY SEVILLE?

Seville is the capital of Andalusia and one of the most beautiful cities in the world. Located on the Guadalquivir River, it is a city of palaces, churches, towers and historic neighborhoods. Its origins date back to Roman times. Its history includes Visigoth, Arabic, Christian, Jewish, and modern cultures and influences. Seville boasts the world's largest cathedral just off of the Plaza de Triunfo.

Seville is at the heart of Andalusia, the beautiful region that covers most of the South of Spain from the Portuguese border and stretching east along the Mediterranean Sea. It is so thoroughly Spanish in personality and mood that it has long stood as the symbol of the entire nation. Seville was once the major seaport of Spain and its well-preserved historic section, the largest in Europe, bears witness to the rich inheritance of its past.

Like the rest of Southern Spain, Seville enjoys a warm Mediterranean climate year-long, with an average 300 days of sunshine a year. Palm trees, jasmine, orange blossom and an array of flowers and bushes sprinkle the city with color and perfume.

Andalusia is where all of Spain’s most powerful images appear together: bullfighters, flamenco dancers and singers, horse farms, white villages, festivals, fairs, parades and more. Seville is the home of the April Feria (April Fair) - a street festival known for its lively and colorful charm.
